U.S. COURT OF FEDERAL CLAIMS

13-607 C

Case No. _____

CLASS ACTION COMPLAINT

This action is brought by current and former federal bankruptcy judges and the surviving spouse of a deceased bankruptcy judge to enforce their right to receive the full amount of compensation owed to them under federal law. Bankruptcy judges are entitled by statute to an annual salary equal to 92% of a district court judge's salary. 28 U.S.C. § 153(a). District court judges' salaries, in turn, are protected by the Compensation Clause of Article III of the U.S. Constitution, which provides that judicial compensation "shall not be diminished during their Continuance in office."

The en banc U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit has held that Congress violated the Compensation Clause by denying cost-of-living adjustments to the salaries of federal judges, as provided for by the Ethics Reform Act of 1989, in fiscal years 1995, 1996, 1997, and 1999. Beer v. United States, 696 F.3d 1174 (Fed. Cir. 2012) (en banc), cert. denied, 133 S. Ct. 1997 (2013). The Court has further held that Congress lacked the statutory authority to deny cost-of-living adjustments to the salaries of federal judges in fiscal years 2007 and 2010. As a consequence, bankruptcy judges are entitled to receive 92% of the properly calculated salaries for district court judges—taking into account the unlawfully denied adjustments—as mandated by 28 U.S.C. § 153(a).

JURISDICTION AND VENUE

13. This Court has subject-matter jurisdiction under the Tucker Act, 28 U.S.C. § 1491(a)(1).

14. Venue in this Court is also proper under the Tucker Act.

FACTUAL BACKGROUND

Bankruptcy Judge Compensation

15. Article III's Compensation Clause provides that "Judges, both of the supreme and inferior Courts," shall "receive for their Services, a Compensation, which shall not be diminished during their Continuance in Office.” U.S. Const. art. III, § 1. Although this clause does not apply to bankruptcy judges, they are entitled by statute to receive “a salary at an annual rate that is equal to 92 percent of the salary of a judge of the district court of the United States.” 28 U.S.C. § 153(a) (as amended by Pub. L. No. 100-202, § 101(a) [tit. IV, § 408(a)], 101 Stat. 1329, 1329-27 (1987)). Because of this explicit statutory linkage, when Congress increases the salaries of district court judges, it does so for bankruptcy judges as well.

16. In addition to receiving an annual salary while in office, bankruptcy judges who have served a minimum of 14 years (the length of one term) and who are at least 65 years old are eligible to retire from the bench and receive a lifetime annuity equal to their salary at the time of retirement. 28 U.S.C. § 377(a). This annuity is subject to an annual cost-of-living adjustment that is “calculated and payable in the same manner as adjustments under section 8340(b) of title 5,” which pegs adjustment amounts to the Consumer Price Index. The total amount of a retired bankruptcy judge’s annuity for any given year, taking into account the cost-of-living adjustment, “may not exceed the salary then payable for the position from which the judge ... retired.” Id. § 377(e).

17. Retired bankruptcy judges may also return to the bench and serve as recalled judges for renewable terms not to exceed five years. A recalled bankruptcy judge receives his or her usual retirement annuity, plus a supplemental payment “equal to the difference between that annuity and the current salary of the office.” Id. § 375(c). A recalled judge who later returns to retirement receives upon leaving office a recalculated annuity that is “equal to the salary [then] in effect” for bankruptcy judges. Id.

18. A separate annuity may be provided to the surviving spouse and dependent children of a deceased bankruptcy judge, depending on whether the judge had enrolled in a voluntary program known as the Judicial Survivors' Annuities System, which Congress made available to bankruptcy judges in 1988. 28 U.S.C. § 376(h); see Retirement and Survivors' Annuities for Bankruptcy Judges and Magistrates Act of 1988, Pub. L. No. 100-659, 102 Stat. 3910 (codified at 28 U.S.C. § 376(a)(1)(F)). The total amount of this annuity is based on a number of factors, including the deceased judge's "average annual salary." 28 U.S.C. § 376(l).

The Ethics Reform Act of 1989

19. The Ethics Reform Act of 1989 overhauled compensation for Article III judges in two relevant and complementary respects. Pub. L. No. 101-194, 103 Stat. 1716 (1989). First, the Act limited a federal judge's ability to earn outside income and receive honoraria. Second, in exchange for that limitation, the Act provided for automatic annual cost-of-living adjustments to protect judicial income from inflation and preserve a judge's real salary over time.

20. Although bankruptcy judges are not directly subject to the 1989 Act's salary adjustments, they benefit from them by virtue of 28 U.S.C. § 153(a), which, as mentioned above, sets bankruptcy judge salaries "equal to 92 percent of the salary of a judge of the district court of the United States as determined pursuant to section 135." Section 135 in turn provides that district court judges' salaries shall be "adjusted by section 461 of this title"—the section that applies the salary adjustments provided for by the 1989 Act. 28 U.S.C. § 135.

21. The 1989 Act established judicial salary adjustments in express and unambiguous terms. Under the Act, whenever a cost-of-living adjustment takes effect for General Schedule (GS) employees (meaning, for federal civil servants), judicial salaries "shall be adjusted by an amount" based on "the most recent percentage change in the [Employment Cost Index],” or ECI, “as determined under section 704(a)(1).” 28 U.S.C. § 461(a)(1) (emphasis added). The ECI is a measure of private sector salaries published quarterly by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, and section 704(a)(1) calculates each annual judicial salary adjustment by first determining the percentage change in the ECI over the previous year, and then subtracting 0.5% from that amount. Pub. L. No. 101-194, § 704(a)(1)(B), 103 Stat. at 1769. The resulting figure becomes the final adjustment rate so long as it falls within a specific range—between 0% and 5%—and does not exceed the annual salary percentage increase, if any, provided to GS employees. 28 U.S.C. § 461(a)(2).

22. Once calculated, the rate increase is multiplied by a judge’s existing salary and rounded to the nearest $100 to determine the total salary adjustment for that year. Id. The judge’s salary is then increased by that amount.

23. The only prerequisite to this otherwise self-executing system for maintaining judicial pay is that GS employees must receive a salary adjustment under 5 U.S.C. § 5303. That statute makes annual GS salary adjustments automatic unless the President determines that they would be “inappropriate” because of a “national emergency or serious economic conditions affecting the general welfare.” Id. § 5303(b)(1). Short of this presidential declaration, GS employees are entitled to receive annual cost-of-living salary adjustments. And, under the 1989 Act, so too are federal judges.

24. The 1989 Act took effect on January 1, 1990, and for each of the first three fiscal years thereafter (1991, 1992, and 1993) judicial salaries were adjusted as required by the Act. Bankruptcy judges’ salaries were likewise increased in accordance with 28 U.S.C. § 153(a). For fiscal year 1994, the President denied GS employees (and by extension, all federal judges) a salary adjustment because he determined that “serious economic conditions”—namely, a large federal budget deficit—made providing pay adjustments inappropriate.

25. For each of the next three fiscal years (1995, 1996, and 1997), however, the judicial salary adjustments mandated by the 1989 Act did not take effect, even though the salaries of GS employees were adjusted. In each of these years, Congress inserted language in appropriations legislation stating that the salaries of federal judges would not be adjusted. See Pub. L. No. 103-329, § 630(a)(2), 108 Stat. 2382, 2424 (Sept. 30, 1994) (FY 1995); Pub. L. No. 104-52, § 633, 109 Stat. 468, 507 (Nov. 19, 1995) (FY 1996); Pub. L. No. 104-208, § 637, 110 Stat. 3009, 3009-364 (Sept. 30, 1996) (FY 1997). As a consequence, bankruptcy judges also did not receive an adjustment to their salaries.

26. Although the judicial salary adjustments dictated by the 1989 Act took effect for the fiscal year 1998, Congress once again blocked those adjustments for fiscal year 1999, meaning that bankruptcy judges too were denied a pay adjustment. See Pub. L. No. 105-277, § 621, 112 Stat. 2681, 2681-518 (Oct. 21, 1998) (FY 1999). The judicial salary adjustments dictated by the 1989 Act took effect in fiscal years 2000 and 2001. Bankruptcy judges' salaries were increased accordingly.

27. In 2001, Congress enacted legislation amending section 140 of Public Law 97-92. Originally enacted on December 15, 1981, section 140 blocks judicial salary adjustments “except as may be specifically authorized by Act of Congress hereafter enacted.” Pub. L. No. 97-92, § 140, 95 Stat. 1183, 1200 (1981) (codified at 28 U.S.C. § 461 note). Section 140 expired in 1982, but the 2001 amendment revived it by adding a sentence to the section stating that it would be effective in fiscal year 1981 and each fiscal year thereafter. Pub. L. No. 107-77, tit. VI, § 625, 115 Stat. 748, 803 (Nov. 28, 2001).

The 2001 amendment did not alter section 140's exception for specific congressional authorization "hereafter enacted."

28. After the 2001 amendment, the federal government interpreted section 140 as effectively nullifying the system for providing judicial salary adjustments established by the 1989 Act. On the government's interpretation, salary adjustments do not take effect unless Congress enacts additional legislation expressly allowing a scheduled adjustment to take effect in a given year.

29. Federal judges received the salary adjustments promised by the 1989 Act for fiscal years 2002, 2003, 2004, 2005, 2006, 2008, and 2009. For each of those years, Congress enacted legislation specifically approving those adjustments. See Pub. L. No. 107-77, tit. III, § 305, 115 Stat. 748, 783 (FY 2002); Pub. L. No. 108-6, § 1, 117 Stat. 10 (FY 2003); Pub. L. No. 108-167, § 1, 117 Stat. 2031 (FY 2004); Pub. L. No. 108-491, § 1, 118 Stat. 3973 (FY 2005); Pub. L. No. 108-447, Div. B, tit. III, § 306, 118 Stat. 2809, 2895 (FY 2005); Pub. L. No. 109-115, Div. A, tit. IV, § 405, 119 Stat. 2396, 2470 (FY 2006); Pub. L. No. 110-161, Div. D, tit. III, § 305, 121 Stat. 1844, 1989 (FY 2008); Pub. L. No. 111-8, Div. D, tit. III, § 310, 123 Stat. 524, 649 (FY 2009). Bankruptcy judges received a corresponding increase in compensation for each of those years as a consequence of their salaries being linked to those of district court judges.

30. For fiscal years 2007 and 2010, however, Congress failed to enact legislation approving the adjustments provided for by the 1989 Act. Because of the government's interpretation of section 140 and its 2001 amendment, federal judges received no salary adjustments in those years.

31. The salary adjustments provided for in fiscal years 1998, 2000, 2001, 2002, 2003, 2004, 2005, 2006, 2008, and 2009 were calculated by reference to base compensation that did not include the salary adjustments withheld in prior fiscal years.

The Beer Decision

32. In 2009, seven Article III judges sued the United States, claiming that the Compensation Clause prohibited Congress from withholding the salary adjustments provided for by the 1989 Act. The judges contended that an unlawful diminution in compensation resulted both from the withholding of salary adjustments in 2007 and 2010, and from the calculation of adjustments in other years by reference to base compensation that did not include the amounts unlawfully withheld in 1995, 1996, 1997, and 1999. Beer v. United States, 696 F.3d 1174, 1178-79 (Fed. Cir. 2012) (en banc).

33. The Court of Federal Claims dismissed the complaint, and a panel of the Federal Circuit affirmed. The U.S. Supreme Court vacated the judgment and remanded the case. On remand, a Federal Circuit panel again affirmed the dismissal, but the en banc court reversed. Id. at 1179.

34. The en banc court held that the 1989 Act created a firm judicial expectation of receiving annual cost-of-living adjustments protected by the Compensation Clause. As the court recognized, “[t]he 1989 Act promised, in precise and definite terms, salary maintenance in exchange for prohibitions on a judge’s ability to earn outside income.” Id. at 1184. The court held that this promise—which is reflected in the Act’s “clear formula for calculation and implementation of those maintaining adjustments”—entitled federal judges “to expect that their real salary [would] not diminish due to inflation or the action or inaction of the other branches of Government,” and in doing so “triggered the expectations-related protections of the Compensation Clause for all sitting judges.” Id. at 1184-85. The court concluded that, “[b]y enacting blocking legislation in 1995, 1996, 1997, and 1999, Congress broke [its prior] commitment and effected a diminution in judicial compensation.” Id. at 1185.

35. Apart from the Compensation Clause question, the en banc court further held that the federal judges should have received the 1989 Act’s adjustments in 2007 and 2010 because “Congress had no statutory authority to deny them.” Id. The court determined that the government had “withheld [the adjustments] from judges in 2007 and 2010 solely because [it] misinterpreted section 140 as requiring a separate and additional authorizing enactment to put those adjustments into effect.” Id. at 1186. As the court interpreted section 140, the statute did not nullify the 1989 Act’s regime for providing automatic salary adjustments because section 140, which was enacted in 1981, “bars judicial salary increases unless (1) ‘specifically authorized by Act of Congress’ and (2) ‘hereafter enacted’”—two criteria that the court found the 1989 Act satisfies. Id. at 1185. The court therefore held that the 1989 Act’s adjustments went into effect regardless of Congress’s failure to pass additional authorizing legislation. Id. at 1186.

36. On January 3, 2013, the government filed a petition for a writ of certiorari in the U.S. Supreme Court. The Court denied the petition on April 22, 2013.

The Injuries to the Plaintiffs

37. The plaintiffs’ injuries in this case stem from the government’s unlawful denials of salary adjustments to district court judges. Those denials caused the government to improperly calculate (1) the salaries for active bankruptcy judges, (2) the annuities for retired bankruptcy judges, (3) the supplemental compensation for recalled bankruptcy judges, and (4) the annuities for surviving spouses of deceased bankruptcy judges enrolled in the Judicial Survivors’ Annuities System.

38. The injuries suffered by the active-judge plaintiffs arise out of their statutory right to receive 92% of a district court judge's salary. See 28 U.S.C. §153(a). By unlawfully denying the salary adjustments required by the 1989 Act in fiscal years 1995, 1996, 1997, 1999, 2007, and 2010, the government failed to pay district court judges their full compensation. But for those denials, the base salary for district court judges would have been increased in each of those years, and each subsequent salary adjustment would have been calculated with reference to a higher base compensation. Because the government calculated bankruptcy judges' salaries based on the unlawfully low salaries paid to district court judges, the government also failed to pay bankruptcy judges their full compensation. Under Federal Circuit precedent, every unlawful deprivation of judicial compensation gives rise to a new injury and claim. See, e.g., Beer, 696 F.3d at 1186-87; Hatter v. United States, 203 F.3d 795, 797-800 (Fed. Cir. 2000) (en banc), aff'd in part, rev'd in part on other grounds, 532 U.S. 557 (2001).

39. The retired-judge plaintiffs have been injured because their annuities initially are equal to the amount of their salaries at the time that they left office. 28 U.S.C. § 377(a). Had those salaries been properly calculated, the retired judges would receive higher annuities than they are currently being paid.

40. The recalled-judge plaintiffs have been injured because they are entitled to receive both an annuity and a supplemental payment "equal to the difference between that annuity and the current salary of the office." 28 U.S.C. § 375(c). Had the salaries of bankruptcy judges been properly calculated, the recalled judges would receive higher supplemental payments than they currently receive.

41. The surviving spouses of bankruptcy judges have been injured because they receive an annuity that is based in part on the "average annual salary" of the deceased spouse. 28 U.S.C. § 376(h) & (l). Had that average annual salary been properly calculated, the surviving spouses would receive a higher annuity.

CLASS ACTION ALLEGATIONS

42. This action should be certified as a class action under Rule 23(b)(2) and/or (b)(3) of the Rules of the United States Court of Federal Claims.

43. The plaintiffs bring this class action on behalf of themselves and all people who served as United States bankruptcy judges at any point from 1995 until the present (excluding the plaintiff in Cornish v. United States (United States Court of Federal Claims, Case No. 12-CV-861)) or who are the surviving spouse of a deceased bankruptcy judge who served during that period and had enrolled in the Judicial Survivors' Annuities System.

44. Rule 23(a)(1) – Numerosity. Members of the class are so numerous that joinder is impracticable. The plaintiffs believe that there are more than 500 class members. Their names and addresses are possessed by the defendant.

45. Rule 23(a)(2) – Commonality. The questions of law and fact common to the members of the class include but are not limited to the following:

- Whether the government's denials of judicial salary adjustments in 1995, 1996, 1997, 1999, 2007, and 2010 unlawfully reduced the compensation of Article III judges;
- Whether the government's denials of judicial salary adjustments in 2007 and 2010 lacked statutory authority;
- Whether the government failed to compensate the class members at an amount equal to 92% of a district court judge's properly calculated salary, in violation of 28 U.S.C. § 153(a);

- Whether, if the class members are entitled to receive higher salaries, they are also entitled to receive higher annuities based on those salaries;
- Whether, if the class members are entitled to receive higher salaries, they are also entitled to receive higher supplemental payments based on those salaries;
- Whether the class members are entitled to back pay for salary underpayments;
- Whether the class members are entitled to back pay for annuity underpayments.

46. Rule 23(a)(3) – Typicality. The named plaintiffs’ claims are typical of the claims of each class member because the named plaintiffs, like every class member, did not receive the full amount of compensation due to them as a result of the government’s unlawful withholding of salary adjustments to district court judges and setting of base compensation without regard to those salary adjustments.

47. Rule 23(a)(4) – Adequacy. The named plaintiffs are adequate class representatives because their interests do not conflict with the interests of the class members they seek to represent, they have retained counsel who are competent and experienced in prosecuting class actions, and they intend to prosecute this action vigorously. The named plaintiffs and their counsel will fairly and adequately protect the class members’ interests.

48. Rule 23(b)(2) – Generally Applicable Government Action. The government has acted on grounds generally applicable to the class because it pays all bankruptcy judges a uniform annual salary, and it pays annuities and supplemental payments based on that uniform salary.

49. Rule 23(b)(3) – Predominance and Superiority. The questions of law or fact common to class members, some of which are set forth in paragraph 45, predominate over questions affecting individual members. The primary question affecting individual class members is the calculation of damages—a mechanical determination that depends almost entirely on the individual class members' dates of service. Once the government's liability has been adjudicated, the claims of all class members can be determined by the Court and administered efficiently in a manner that is far less erroneous, burdensome, and expensive than if it were attempted through filing, discovery, and trial of all individual cases. In addition, a class action is superior to other available methods for the fair and efficient adjudication of this controversy for the following reasons:

- Individual damages to many class members may be less than, or not substantially more than, the amount of individual litigation expenses, making the expense of non-class litigation prohibitive or impractical for class members;
- No reason suggests that class members otherwise have an interest in individually controlling the prosecution of separate actions;
- The plaintiffs know of no difficulty to be encountered in the management of this case as a class action;
- The prosecution of separate actions by individual class members would create a risk of inconsistent and varying adjudications, whereas a class action will assure uniformity of decisions among class members;
- Certifying this case as a class action will serve the overall interests of justice by providing the most efficient and cost-effective method of resolving the lawsuit without duplicative litigation, while allaying statute of limitations or other concerns.

CLAIM FOR RELIEF

Violations of 28 U.S.C. §§ 153(a), 375(c), 376, & 377

50. For each fiscal year since 1995, the plaintiffs have been unlawfully denied the compensation due to them under 28 U.S.C. §§ 153(a), 375(c), 376, and 377, based on the government's unlawful withholding of the judicial salary adjustments provided for by the 1989 Act.

51. As a remedy for these statutory violations, the plaintiffs are entitled to back pay and declaratory relief.

REQUEST FOR RELIEF

The plaintiffs request that the Court:

a. Certify this action as a class action under Rule 23(b)(2) and/or (b)(3) of the Rules of the United States Court of Federal Claims;

b. Declare that the United States has violated 28 U.S.C. §§ 153(a), 375(c), 376, and 377 by withholding the salary adjustments provided for under the 1989 Act in fiscal years 1995, 1996, 1997, 1999, 2007, and 2010;

c. Declare that the plaintiffs' salaries should by law be set equal to 92% of the salary that a district court judge would currently receive but for the unlawful withholding of prior salary adjustments provided for under the 1989 Act;

d. Declare that the plaintiffs' annuities should by law be set equal to 92% of the salary that a district court judge would have received at the time that the plaintiff retired from office but for the unlawful withholding of prior salary adjustments provided for under the 1989 Act;

e. Declare that the plaintiffs' supplemental payments should by law be calculated according to the proper current salary amount for active bankruptcy judges, as set forth in paragraph (c) above;

f. Award the plaintiffs back pay for the salary owed but not paid to them during the six years preceding the filing of this lawsuit, which equals the sum of (1) 92% of the salary that district court judges were entitled to receive for each fiscal year during that period, as calculated to reflect the unlawfully withheld salary adjustments—and by reference to the base salary that each plaintiff would have received in each year but for those unlawful denials—minus (2) the total amount of the salaries actually paid to each plaintiff during that period;

g. Award the plaintiffs back pay for the annuities owed but not paid to them during the six years preceding the filing of the lawsuit;

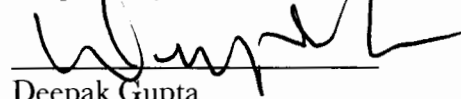

h. Award the plaintiffs back pay for the supplemental payments owed but not paid to them during the six years preceding the filing of this lawsuit;

i. Award the plaintiffs their costs, expenses, and attorney fees under 28 U.S.C. § 2412; and

j. Grant the plaintiffs all other proper relief.
